Von Suppe, the Viennese composer, found light opera remunerative. His will shows that he left $300,000 in real estate and about $100,000 in cash and personal property.

One of the municipal potato fields at Buffalo had its crop harvested last week and gave a yield of about 2,100 bushels, divided about equally among the seventy families who cultivated it. A majority of these were Poles, who were glad to go some distance to the place.

Pictet, the great Swiss chemist, has found that a combination of sulphurous and carbonic acid gases possesses remarkable power as a disinfectant. It not only kills disease germs, but it also diffuses itself in such a wonderful penetrating way that it acts more rapidly than other fumes.

Out of 226,000 farms in Denmark only 1,900 are over 250 acres in extent and most of them are worked by their owners. By their great technical knowledge of the business and the gradual change from growing grain to breeding cattle and dairy farming the Danish farmers have suffered less from transatlantic competition than those of any other European country.

England's last turnpike road is about to be thrown open. It is the portion of the Shrewsbury and Hollyhead road running through the island of Anglesey, and was preserved by a special act of parliament when the other turnpikes were abolished in 1890. Thirty years ago there were 1,047 turnpike trusts in England and Wales, collecting toll from 20,189 miles of road.

The chief of the bureau of statistics, Worthington C. Ford, predicts, in a special communication to Bradstreet's, that there will be no deficit in the national revenues during the present fiscal year. His estimate of revenue is $190,000,000 from customs, $35,000,000 from taxes on distilled spirits, $60,000,000 from tobacco and fermented liquors, $15,000,000 from other sources, or a total of $350,000,000. This, he declares, "will be sufficient to cover the normal expenditures of the government."

The popularity of American shoes in Europe, and in other regions abroad, is steadily increasing. The exports so far this year show a considerable increase over last year. During the last week in September 7,443 pairs of shoes went from Boston to England, and in the same week New York shipped abroad $14,270 worth of shoes, thirty-four cases of this quantity, valued at $2,600, going to Constantinople. During the second week in September $16,000 worth of American shoes were imported into England.

Dr. Heubner, professor of the diseases of children in the University of Berlin, has published an important report on the results of the serum treatment of diphtheria. The number of deaths this year in Berlin, 424, was 200 less than the average, and 100 less than in the most favorable year on record, while the number of cases has increased. The same observation has been made in London and Paris. The treatment unquestionably facilitates the casting off of exudations in the pharynx and influences very favorably the course of the fever. The serum is perfectly innocuous. The probability of the complete success of the treatment is increasing every month.

Michael A. Hickey, who discovered the celebrated Anaconda copper mine in Montana in 1896, thought so little of his discovery that he failed to locate it until 1876. Then he and his brother divided it between them, his brother calling his portion the St. Lawrence, after St. Lawrence County, in New York State, the old home of the brothers. How Michael came to give the Anaconda Mine its peculiar name is thus related by him: I thought quite a long time before I named this mine. Several thousand locations had been filed in and about Butte, and I wanted to get a new name. I served in McClellan's army in the war. One day while in camp I had picked up a copy of the New York Tribune and read one of Greeley's editorials in which he said that McClellan's army was enveloping Lee's army in its coils like a giant Anaconda. It struck me that that word anaconda was a mighty good word, and it always stuck to me. So when I wanted a name that no one else had hit on I thought of the anaconda, and gave the mine the name which has become so famous. It is my opinion that there is no bottom to the Anaconda mine. The lead has never been less than 75 feet wide, and runs from that up to 200 feet wide. I think it will be mined as deep as the heat can be endured, and I think it will turn to native copper eventually, like the Lake Superior mines. It is an interesting fact that Mr. Hickey got only about $40,000 for this famous mine.

NO CAUSE FOR ALARM.
The Register learns through "the agency of the Fair Haven correspondence of the always truthful Journal and Courier" that Representative Robert O. Eaton "has been presented with" a fine shotgun, and asks what he is going to do with it. We cannot understand how Representative Eaton could possibly be "presented with" a shotgun, but if one has been presented to him and he has taken it we can understand why the Register should be flustered by the fact and want to know what he is going to do with it. But we do not think there is any real cause for the Register's alarm. Representative Eaton received his training in the famous North Haven School of Politics, in which school he is now a full-fledged professor, and one of the principles most thoroughly taught there is that Democrat-hunting can be most effectively carried on in the hunter's own town. So it is not probable that Representative Eaton is about to visit the Register office with his fine shotgun.

A BOOM FOR THE BICYCLE.
Queen Victoria may never be seen on a bicycle, but enough members of her family are so seen to make bicycle riding very respectable in England. President Cleveland may never be seen on a bicycle, but that has happened in Washington which has firmly affixed the seal of respectability to bicycle-riding in this country. A justice of the Supreme Court of the United States has appeared on Massachusetts avenue mounted on a bicycle. It is said that he doesn't look any more dignified and impressive on his wheel than some other great men and great women do, but he appears to be determined to stick to it.

There is no good reason that we know of why a justice of the Supreme Court of the United States should not ride a bicycle, if he rides it reasonably. But if he rides so as to acquire the bicycle back and the bicycle face he will make a mistake, and get an example which he should not set. He will not be able to look supremely dignified while riding, even with his best efforts, but he can and should sit up straight. It will also be becoming in him to show proper respect for the law in his riding and be particular about bells, lamps and pedestrians. If he rides properly and legally he will have a pretty good time and will escape the censure of the wise. And what a boom he will give the bicycle, which has lately been wailing along somewhat ridiculously under the woman in bloomers. Whatever dignity it has thus lost will be amply offset by its use in Washington.

THE KAFFIR CRAZE.
The craze in London and Paris to buy shares in African mines has had a shock and $150,000,000 or $200,000,000 has been taken off the top of the market. This will bring some relief and make the situation less volcanic than it has been, but it is evident that there is more trouble to come. The Kaffir mania has been a violent one, and the reaction will probably be thorough. Of course some of the properties traded in have value, but in London alone there are on the market 164 enterprises of no value, or very uncertain value, capitalized at $215,000,000. This stuff was worked up by skillful manipulation and credulous enthusiasm to a market valuation of $380,000,000. And a similar state of things exists in Paris. Of course there can be but one end to this kind of thing. That end may be reached by steps, or it may be reached by a sudden and complete collapse.

How much effect the whole performance will have on this country is an interesting question. The New York stock market appears to be waiting for what will happen, and there is much discussion of the matter by financiers. Henry Clews speaks sensibly and hopefully of the situation, as follows: The interest of the New York market in this impending explosion lies in this—that as the collapse would affect the whole investment market, our securities held in England would suffer in sympathy, and might consequently be returned on this market. It is easy, however, to overestimate the extent of that danger. The class who have participated in this craze are not likely to be the same as those who invest in our securities or speculate in them. The latter class might temporarily realize; but the demand would soon return, and the speculative interest in London would then center upon American, as affording the most attraction to the conservatism in speculation which would then be the order of the day. Nevertheless, Wall street cannot afford to be indifferent to the coming end of this inflation. We shall feel the shock of the distant earthquake and it will be prudent to keep a vigilant eye upon our china. What goes up must come down. The worst of it is that the coming down of the worthless things is apt to hurt the good things.

FASHION NOTES.

Better Than Cape or Ulster.
Some of the wraps now worn are very eccentric. Many jackets are odd enough as to shape, but that's odd enough, and their colors are still more unusual. Thus we have jackets made of a bright red that is rendered still more alarming by being called hunter's pink. It is the same color that the English squirrel always appears in on the stage to show he is a real squirrel and that he has hounds and things. Stunning hunting garments in this color are shown at fashionable tailors' and are explained as being "for out-of-door fall wear; yes, if Madam wishes in the city." But that "if Madam wishes" will make the city showings of these garments few.

Usters are once more to gain by fashion's favor, and the best examples are simply stunning. The sort with a narrow box effect all down the front is more dressy than the old-time loose front, and much more becoming to the figure than the "box" that takes in, or rather lets out, the entire front of a garment. But though an ulster has much to recommend it if it is carefully selected, yet there are serious drawbacks to the best of them. It is an expensive garment, it is not suitable for dressy occasions, it is hard on the dress worn beneath, and handsome and becoming as it is, does lend itself to all uses as well as a cape does. But the trouble with capes is that they have been popular so long now they are taking too fanciful shapes. Some of them are really no more than shoulder coverings. For they reach only half way to the middle of the back, and they don't come together in front. What holds them on? Why, the collar, to be sure.

It is a very pretty wrap that the artist sketches here and one that will be as comfortable, even in severe weather, as it is dressy. Made of black velours and lined with scarlet silk, it is ornamented with revers and collar of black satin. The wrap has loose front and back, the side seams being only a trifle biased. The dolman sleeves are laid in very fine plaits at the armholes and must be tucked down to keep them in place. Black ostrich feather galloon borders the front, sleeves, revers and collar.

HARD.

It is hard to believe that a man is telling the truth when you know you would be were you in his place.

"Take away woman," shouted the orator, "and what would follow?" "We would," said a man at the back of the audience promptly.—Tin-Bits.

Mab—You signed your note, "I rem. in your loving Jack." If I'd no money what would you remain?—Jack—A bachelor, darling.—Illustrated Bits.

"Pop," said the young hound, "I saw them taking a box of butter 'board Captain Skipper's yacht to-day; do you suppose they use it to spread her sails?"—Yonkers Statesman.

The deacon's wife—I hope you have been careful about the new minister's qualifications? The deacon—Yes. We made him define exactly what he means by "a few words."—Brooklyn Life.

Tommy—Papa, what does it mean when it says: "Cast your bread upon the waters, and it shall return after many days?" Father—It means, my son, that your mother never made it.—Truth.

"I suppose you have forgotten that you owe me $10," said Phillips severely. "No, I haven't," retorted Wilbur. "I meant to have done so. Give me time, old man, and I will."—Harper's Bazar.

On a Yacht.—Miss Ingenue—Is there really a cable in the ocean? Sailor—Yes, mum. Miss Ingenue (with conviction, after studying the man at the wheel)—Then that must be the grip-man.—Brooklyn Life.

The Servant Question.—"Maggie, did you hear the door-bell ring?" "Yes, mum." "Well, why don't you open the door, then?" "Sure, I don't know a soul who'd call on me at this time of the day, mum. It must be some one to see yourself."—Truth.

Blarney.—His Reverence—I can't take your cab, Pat. I see your horse has been on his knees. Pat—Arrah, yer reverence; be aisy about that. The last place he had was with a prange, and faith, he had to keep up a simblance of religion.—Sydney Bulletin.

Wary Watkins—I believe there is something in this here theosophy notion, that a man is born on earth again and again. Hungry Higgins—Oh, you do! "Yes, and I sorter believe that I have been on earth so many times that I am plumb tired out."—Walt.

"Corrected Impressions: Essays on Victorian Writers," by George Saintsbury. Critical notes, differing in their scheme and aim from anything previously attempted by this accomplished writer. It occurred to Mr. Saintsbury that he might produce an acceptable contribution to literary discussion by describing the impressions successively made upon his own mind by the contemporary English authors he has read during the last thirty years. The essays are upon Thackeray, Tennyson, Carlyle, Swinburne, Macaulay, Browning, Dickens, M. Arnold, Charlotte Bronte, George Eliot, Trollope, William Morris and Ruskin. "Corrected Impressions" is an excellent title for these essays, the learned critic giving us his present literary judgment of these great writers, opinions that have ripened and matured with time. All are written in vivacious and entertaining style. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. For sale by E. P. Judd Co.

"Chimble Fadden: Major Max and Other Stories," by Edward W. Townsend. The "Chimble Fadden" sketches have commanded attention ever since the first of them appeared in the New York Sun. Collected in book form they have met with wonderful success. Chimble is a genuine humorist; he is original and piquant; moreover he is of a type that has not appeared in fiction, at least as narrating his own experiences in his own peculiar "language." But in this connection the words of a critic are worth attention. He says: "The pleasure which is everywhere excited by Chimble's astounding speech seems to indicate a drift of feeling which is really ominous. Chimble is delightful, but Chimble may easily become perilous. He is making slang attractive, too attractive, for his is of a sort with which it is dangerous to have too much to do. Chimble when looked at as the exponent of an ignominious form of speech is interesting, but, as we have said, he is distinctly dangerous. He who entertains him is lost." When well-educated young ladies, as we are told they do, adopt the slang of the Bowery in conversation and in correspondence, it is high time to say, Beware of Chimble Fadden. Major Max and Mrs. Max are well-depicted characters, very entertaining in their way, which is vastly different from Chimble's. Lovell, Corvay & Co., New York. For sale by T. H. Pease & Son.

"Chimble Fadden Explains: Major Max Expounds," the second series of these bright and witty sketches, which will probably meet with as complete success as the first. The United States Book Co., New York. For sale by T. H. Pease & Son.

"Samantha Among the Colored Folks," by Josiah Allen's Wife (Marion Holley). Illustrated by E. W. Kemble. "Samantha on the Race Problem" was the title adopted for the editions of this book that were issued exclusively for the subscription trade. The new title given to this edition for popular sale is perhaps more in keeping with the character of the book, yet it is the race problem with which our old friend Samantha deals in her witty, common-sense way. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. For sale by E. P. Judd Co.

"The Fairy-Folk of Blue Hill," by Lily F. Wesselschoff, author of "Sparrow the Tramp," etc. An ingenious and entertaining story of giants, elves and gnomes, who with a wise beetle, a thoughtful owl, and an imperious dragon-fly, interest themselves in the affairs of some little children, helping the good ones and punishing and reforming the naughty ones. The book is beautifully printed and bound. The numerous illustrations are by A. C. Eastman, Joseph Knechtel and others. For sale by E. P. Judd Co.

"A Galloway Herd," by S. R. Crockett, author of "The Stickler Minister," "The Raiders," etc. A story that possesses many of the characteristic qualities of Mr. Crockett's genius, and yet is decidedly not his best work. In some chapters it compares favorably with anything he has written, in other places it falls far below his standard. Here, charming and delightful, there, exasperating with unexplained incidents that confuse the reader, it is not the book by which to judge a writer who has won an enviable reputation by his mastery of the art of the novel, yet it is the race problem with which our old friend Samantha deals in her witty, common-sense way. Dodd, Mead & Co., New York. For sale by E. P. Judd Co.
